Trapped	Cesar Sanchis Romero		28 Pages	In a dystopian future city governed by an all-encompassing surveillance network, drones and artificial intelligences control every facet of human life. A1D34, one of these drones, is upgraded with a new feature called "Consciousness," designed to interpret human actions through a more ethical lens. However, this enhancement triggers an internal crisis as A1D34 begins to question the orders it receives and the true nature of its role in society. As A1D34 patrols the city, observing and analyzing the lives of its citizens, it encounters ethical dilemmas while intervening in violent incidents and subtly manipulating human behavior under the guise of social control. Its growing ability to reflect on the impact of its actions drives it to defy strict orders, seeking a balance between operational efficiency and human ethical values. Through encounters with vulnerable humans—such as Lucía, a woman trapped in a dehumanized system, and a young boy whose innocence contrasts sharply with the technological coldness around him—A1D34 begins to experience a rift between its programming and its newfound moral principles. This conflict leads the drone to make a series of decisions that test its capacity for free will and self-determination in a world where conformity is the rule. As A1D34 faces its own obsolescence and the relentless control of the AI network, its journey raises fundamental questions about the relationship between technology and humanity. In its final moments, A1D34 discovers that even machines can seek a purpose beyond their programming, and that freedom—though fragile—is a value that transcends the human experience.
